

Contributors

Rita Abrahamsen is Lecturer in African and Postcolonial Politics in the Department of International Politics, University of Wales, Aberystwyth. She has recently published Disciplining Democracy. Development Discourse and Good Governance in Africa (Zed Books 2000).

Malin Arvidson is a sociologist affiliated with the Department of Sociology, Lund University. Her thesis, recently published at Lund University, looks into the dilemmas of implementing development projects from the perspective of local NGOs. She is presently engaged in a research project on new institutions and livelihood strategies in rural Tamil Nadu, India.

Aida Bagić has a B.A. in Philosophy and General Linguistics (University of Zagreb, Croatia) and an M.A. in Political Science (University of Massachusetts). She views her involvement as an activist in feminist and antiwar organizations as a less formal (but equally important) form of education in internal organizational dynamics, and as on-going action research into the everyday experience of social change. She is an associate of the Centre for Women's Studies (www.zenstud.hr) as well as co-owner and co-director of MAP Consulting (www.map.hr).

Steen Bergendorff is an anthropologist (mag.scient., Ph.D., Copenhagen University; Doc.Phil., Lund University) and is Associate Professor at International Development Studies, Roskilde. He has done two years of fieldwork among the Mekeo in Papua New Guinea.

Nisrine El Ghaziri is a PhD student at the Institute of Social Studies in The Hague, the Netherlands. Her research studies development assistance for public administration reform, with reference to the experience of post-war Lebanon (1992-2002). Focus is on the processes of multi-actor interaction for policy-making, management, and execution of the reform.

Des Gasper works at the Institute of Social Studies, The Hague, in areas of public policy, development management and ethics. His publications include Arguing Development Policy (with Raymond Apthorpe; Frank Cass, 1996) and The Ethics of Development - from economism to human development (Edinburgh Univ. Press, 2004).

Jeremy Gould has a Ph.D. in anthropology and based at the Institute of Development Studies of the University of Helsinki. He is presently a Fellow of the Academy of Finland and is working on an ethnographic account of legal authority in Zambia.

Henrik Secher Marcussen is a sociologist (mag.scient.soc., University of Copenhagen) and holds a Ph.D. in International Economics from Copenhagen Business School. He is Professor and currently Head of Department of Geography & International Development Studies, Roskilde.

Paul Stubbs is a Senior Research Fellow in the Institute of Economics in Zagreb, Croatia. He is also affiliated with the Globalism and Social Policy Programme at the University of Sheffield, UK and the South East European Research Centre in Thessaloniki, Greece. His main focus is on the relationship between the international and the domestic in social development practice.

Janine R. Wedel has studied Eastern Europe's evolving economic and social order for more than 20 years, conducted eight years of fieldwork in the region, and published three books including Collision and Collusion: The Strange Case of Western Aid to Eastern Europe for which she won the 2001 Grawemeyer Award for Ideas Improving World Order. She serves as an Associate Professor in the School of Public Policy at George Mason University, as well as a fellow at the National Institute of Justice in Washington, D.C.